And, after a time, nothing would be more natural in heaven or on earth than for the leading spirit in this disaffection and rebellion to plan a united opposition to the edict that had been announced. But even after such a new exhibition of sinfulness, the Deity, as might be expected, and as the Scriptures hint, would be infinitely merciful to those who had planned the rebellion and were carrying it on. They seem, as a matter of fact, to have had free access to the angelic abodes as late as the time of the patriarch Job, four thousand years ago.¹⁸ And there are passages from which one easily may infer that their final banishment from the blessings of the invisible world did not take place until the ministry of Jesus had begun on earth. It is as if for thousands of years...
