Ers for the plainness and candor in which I had addressed them. In one, received but a few days since, the writer, evidently a gentleman of education and culture, says, I have read your medical adviser and guide To health with care, and have become much interested in its contents. I think I can see my own case in it as if seen in a mirror Such encomiums, coming from disinterested sources, are much more grateful to my feelings, than would be the ?ating criticisms of the most learned. In the outset I did not undertake to compile a medical hand-book to serve as a vade mecum to the professional practitioner, nor did I choose to put into the hands of the numberless irregular doctors who swarm in our midst, a treatise to enable them to Obtain, in a cheap way, that knowledge which I...
